"NARCCW Home-Welcome!" actually is url ~www.ihs-trainet.com~
As an umbrella agency, does NACCRW have an EIN#? IHS surely must Even in "pdf" format, this logo (click to see) functions as a link. The website (see p2) is labeled "co. 2008!

"NARCCW" was one of 4 sponsors (two of them BIG) of 2016 NCCD* Conference on Children, Fam & Youth held in Orange County, CA Comments by blogger Let's Get Honest, see Familycourtatters.wordpress.com, 10/13/2016 post discussing The California Endowment ("About Writing Style / Work Sample") Dec. revs.

IHS is the Coordinator for the

Welcome to the North American Resource Center for Child Welfare

The North American Resource Center for Child Welfare (NARCCW) is an umbrella organization of agencies working to achieve best practice in child welfare by providing professionals with the resources necessary to help children and families.

To this end, the NARCCW houses four collaborative agencies which include: The Institute for Human Services, Center for Child Welfare Policy, Family Trust Clinic and TRAINet.

IHS Forges Partnership with Child Welfare Leaders in Russia

This year marked the start of face-to-face meetings between child welfare leaders in St. Petersburg, Russia and Columbus, Ohio. It began January 11 as a series of gatherings and study tours in Columbus, and will culminate in spring in St. Petersburg.

The Russian representative is Partnership for Every Child(P4EC), a non-governmental organization (NGO) working to strengthen Russia's growing foster care system by developing novel program models, providing staff and foster parent training, expanding networks and resources, and shaping public perception about foster care. The U.S. representative is the Institute for Human Services (IHS), which has managed Ohio's child welfare training system and served 88 county child protection agencies since the program was founded in 1985. IHS is also an NGO recognized as a leading child welfare expert and provider of resources and training technologies throughout North America, Eastern Europe, and Central Asia.

The immediate goal of the Russian-American partnership is to create an association of foster caregivers in St. Petersburg and neighboring regions that will support its members and be a catalyst for social change. At the same time the P4EC members, led by Director Lyudmila Sorokina and Program Director Irina Zinchenko, are looking at foster care models that work in Ohio, particularly for children with developmental disabilities and other special needs.

The work is being funded by a State Department grant for peer-to-peer projects between Russian and American NGOs. Under Program Director Dr. Judith S. Rycus, IHS will support P4EC's development by sharing resources developed over the past thirty years. P4EC also offers IHS information on models for both respite care and longer term foster care that work in Russia.

This is the fifth Russian-American child welfare collaboration that IHS has organized in the last five years.

Local organizations involved in the study tours included the Ohio Department of Job & Family Services, Licking County Job & Family Services, Caring for Kids, the Central Ohio Regional Training Center of the Ohio Child Welfare Training Program, The Village Network, the Ohio Primary Parent Advisory Council, the Public Children Services Association of Ohio, and young adults who had previously been in foster care.

NCCD was originally formed (long ago - early 1900s?) by probation officers. **

Comments on Russian/American partnerships in this field: HOW MANY US TAXPAYERS KNOW ABOUT IT?

AND, In which direction is the most influence flowing, or have we in the USA forgotten the "Pavlov" influence in attempting to privatize government, standardize, (electronic deliverables sure helps) including: corrections, education (early childhood and through the whole Cradle-to-Career pipeline), housing, probation, and turn nearly ALL social problems into a behavioral modification project, with the main questions being only, who profits, and (of course at public expense, so the public will be the eventual FINANCIAL loser in any scenario, whether deliverables are decent or lousy) "how can we sell the public on internationally aligning justice social service delivery, and eventually financial systems for most efficacy"?

At the Russian guests' sendoff dinner last month, Ms. Tatiana Krayneva, P4EC's PR director, toasted to the success of the alliance, saying "Last year we saw tension between our two countries. But in our alliance there is no such tension, because the focus is on our common humanity and the goals we share for children and families."

Partners will spend the next few months exchanging ideas and resources via Skype and other distance-communication technologies. In spring of 2015, IHS representatives will visit P4EC and affiliates in St. Petersburg for a close-up view and further dialogue. The year-long initiative runs from July, 2014 through June, 2015.
