search results (see date, search string). As blogger Let'sGetHonest (familycourtmatters.wordpress.com), I am responsible for sidebar commentary [and extra arrows, ovals, etc.] based on findings over several years from researching and writing that blog, and from life experiences as parent, AND teacher in diverse school districts, after school and private settings.

The near obsession with organizing nonprofit groups named or themed "CHILDREN" (whether educating, protecting, providing healthcare to, preventing abuse or ensuring they are NOT raised by single mothers, or low-income families, especially minority families, without intervention) has proved tempting for proliferation of sponsored posts at public and private universities, state-level commission, public/private partnerships at the highest (financially most solvent) level of corporate influence — through the foundations mostly, of course) and has proved utterly tempting in that everyone involved knows that the US Federal Agencies of HHS and DOE (at a minimum) are going to be involved - along with their support, often in a 2:1 ratio, Public $$ to Private. The guarantee behind private entities seeking public investments is the power of the state to tax, and if taxes aren't paid to seize assets — not to mention the same state's power to seize also children— offspring, justly of unjustly, and often without provocation, or legal justification.

Of course! Open Society Foundations, overtly global and progressive in focus, will be sponsoring Universal PreK and ECE as part of achieving equity (FYI, a priority has been specifically states as "Black men and boys" as the target of oppression. What "black women and girls," or others are supposed to in response to on overtly racist/sexist definition of who is to be help (other than applaud the issue) is unclear. Again, HHS-administered (HMRF) marriage/fatherhood programming (a.k.a. FUNDING) has indeed seen ECE as where to begin the indoctrination outside of this immediate context. What saddens me is how acquaintance on BOTH side of the political aisle cannot express in nonpolitical (i.e., in Fiscal / FINANCIAL/BUSINESS terms) the same behavior on the right-wing, conservative side, i.e. Public/Private partnerships, claiming the "high ground" citing to experts in <>Psychology <>Education and <>Social Science.

At least read the quoted expert's CV, and also on NYU Steinhardt, and the endowed or sponsored chair...

ECE as overt social experimentation citing to "social outcomes" No wonder it's typically the "low-income" as first cohort of test subjects

PRINCETON/FUTURE of CHILDREN, cont'd., while one of the institutions involved may be thought progressive, these policies are anything but, and closely linked to both the Social Science excuse for minimizing violence against women, and the religious excuse for closing off safe exits for women from violent marriages in ways similar to those used to discourage the exit from slavery — known risk that one's children might be kept behind in it.

Seems to me that while no single person could check out ALL of the websites coordinating the push for universal pre-K in the context of establishing a one-world government (i.e., the "international development" context), all people should at least comprehend the cash flow and the institutional/government/philanthropic settings through which it IS taking place. ~ * | * ~ Particularly US citizens, whose taxation has provided IRS tax advantages for tax-exempts (990PF and 990 filers alike) enabling the stockpiling of wealth decentralizing where it's been distributed for holding the investment platforms, and through this wealth obtaining AND retaining political influence) for corporate wealth for decades since at least WWII. If we can exert any countering influence to eroding national legal and financial borders and being re-colonized BY OUR ELECTED LEADERSHIP and appointed institutions in PARTNERSHIPS (JPAs, Govt-owned and -run professional 501©3 associations, etc.) under which we have NO legal rights, let alone enforceable ones, with CORPORATIONS and their related Orgs.
