DISCUSSION: You can see below subject matter (initiatives) categories, however [bottom right and last phrase of the page description, which I underlined] the overriding issue of NONPROFITS (tax-exempt businesses) attracting and developing more of the same is a CORPORATE CONTROL OF INCOME-PRODUCING ASSETS and TAXATION issue. Naturally, those in this (philanthropy) business sector seek to perpetuate and expand the tax-exempt sector, but within ANY such sector will typically be a business interest. By functioning as tax-exempt (versus in an IPO/ public shareholder method), control is maintained in the board of directors generation after generation which, as we can see here, is a single family line with a propensity to name projects, foundations, schools at private universities, and "Challenges" after itself. The Public School Challenge (which won't be mentioned on the website) includes a successor entity in Chicago who invested in a business later responsible for taking out the CEO of the Chicago Public Schools under felony fraud INVOLVING that entity. There are significant issues with the chronic insistence on developing and expanding "Nonprofit Leadership" by those already in control of billions of dollars of wealth spread across one or several foundations, in the USA.

Through the unique philanthropic vision of its Board of Directors, the Annenberg Foundation is proud to support the arts, community, education, global issues, and development of nonprofit organizations.
