Building Strong Families - Demonstration Project The project is one of the centerpieces of a broad national policy strategy to improve child well-being through family stabilization and healthy marriage formation and is specifically tailored to couples either expecting or who have just had a baby. It promotes healthy relationship development of the parents, improved adult communication, better parenting and employment skills, home financing and stress management. Building Strong Families is a unique collaboration of the Administration for Children and Families, the Texas Attorney General's Office, the Texas Health and Human Services Commission, Mathematica Policy Research, Inc, HFI, and our implementation partner, Healthy Families San Angelo. HFI is designated one of seven federal demonstration sites nationwide to determine the effectiveness of programs designed to improve relationship dynamics on low-income unmarried couples and their children.
