

The Family Court Franchise System Links, Posts, and Insight by Let's Get Honest, c

Mosaic ▾ | Pages ▾

Source is one of my blogs, a March 1, 2012, post: "Connecticut's High-Conflict Court" See <http://thefamilycourtmoneymachine.blogspot.com/2012/03/connecticut-high-conflict-court.html>

Attorney Armata is a founding member of the Collaborative Divorce Lawyers' Association and the Central Connecticut Collaborative Family Law Group, a member of the Association of Family and Conciliation Courts {{naturally}} and the International Academy of Collaborative Professionals {{set up by an AFCC member from, as I recall, California}} He is an informational & referral attorney for Connecticut Women's Education and Legal Fund, a charter member of the Capital Area Foundation for Equal Justice and has participated in the "Law Works for People" program. He has served as a Connecticut delegate for the Tri-State Conference on Family Law and has served with the High Conflict and Lawyering Sub-Committees of the Governor's Commission on Family Law.

"AFCC"

Ya gotta love those Governor's Commissions on Family Law... PA had a similar one.

Attorney Armata has been elected as a Fellow of the Connecticut Bar Foundation James W. Cooper Fellows Program. He is also a founding member of the Academy of Child Advocacy.

How's that working out for the little boy whose witnesses of his abuse protested the confirmation of Ms. Murphy to Superior Court Judge? (see my page).

In 2003, Connecticut Supreme Court Chief Justice William J. Sullivan named Attorney Armata to the Parenting Education Program and Advisory Committee, where he continues to serve.

"God bless Newt, Ron Haskins, George Bush, and Welfare Reform" must be a nightly prayer of thanksgiving. It frees up A/V funding for parent education, supervised visitation, and marriage/fatherhood promotion, right up the alley of the AFCC enterprises.