

(MINI-SECTION, "BASIC SENSE OF NUMBERS NOT OPTIONAL HERE / LINGO")

BUT, we are being constantly conditioned as to work, act like an adult (keep those tax receipts coming, and produce kids to continue the process) – but when it comes to raising our own children, knowing how to divorce, how to marry, how to co-parent, and how to THINK about life-and-death matters, including whether or not to put space between oneself and people who have injured, harmed, threatened to kill, threatened to kidnap, or otherwise shown destructive capacity towards ourselves, and/or our neighbors and immediate relatives, in THOSE categories, we are being conditioned to act like children; <sup>ed</sup> To dissociate from understanding even the basic economic concepts of government and of public/private relationships which, these days, are how it operates. (overlapping paragraph)

We are essentially being discouraged from independent thought which might lead to independent action based on acquired individual assessment of what is, as coming from what was, and where it's likely going. We are also being coerced, in many fields, into consent to things not based on law, and as alleged to be in our own (again, group, collective) best interest. The appearance of choice has been downgraded into the less important matters of life, and of self-government.

The concept of time as measuring degrees of change, and what kind of change: ALSO important to develop a sense of change over time to organizations whose maze-like financials matter should be developed if it's not already there. I have, both individually (people in my life) and as a US citizen (systems affecting that life course, damaging and derailing it, this century after I by choice left a dangerous relationship, likely just in time...). It's counter-intuitive to survival and to the human spirit, which has no desire for on-going enslavement. to go back into denial once one is aware of how things work and what some of the primary operators are.
